
COPY MASTER

Background: This has been a tough week. Just before Christmas break almost all your teachers have required meaningful assignments or planned exams. A review sheet for your math class is due today along with an English paper. You've worked hard to get them both done and missed a great basketball game last night to finish your work. About 10 minutes before the first passing bell rings, one of your friends approaches you. He asks if you have finished the math review paper, and when you say yes, he asks if you would allow him to copy some answers to finish his page. He failed to get it done after watching the great overtime game last night.

The Actors: You, your friend, other classmates, your teacher

Stop! Are my emotions in control? Do I have a dilemma? (Describe the problem.)

Think!

What are my choices?	What character traits would be demonstrated?	How does the Golden Rule apply?
1.
2.
3.
4.

Act! What character traits do I choose to demonstrate? What choice will I make?

What supporting character traits or skills will I need to act on my choice? Do I need to ask for help?