
TEACHER ERROR?

Background: An 87, that's great! You relax as you see the grade on your last exam. You didn't think you had done well, so it is a relief to see the score. That will help your average. As the teacher reviews the answers on the test, you recognize that she has misgraded your paper. You add up the points several times and it comes to a 77 each time (Wangaard 2006).

The Actors: You, your teacher, other students

Stop! Are my emotions in control? Do I have a dilemma? (Describe the problem.)

Think!

What are my choices?	What character traits would be demonstrated?	How does the Golden Rule apply?

Act! What character traits do I choose to demonstrate? What choice will I make?

What supporting character traits or skills will I need to act on my choice? Do I need to ask for help?
