
WHO KNEW?

Background: During a recent exam, you observe some classmates passing a cheat sheet that clearly has notes for the exam. Two or three classmates are passing the notes. At one point during the exam, you and another student who isn't part of the note passing make eye contact as you both recognize what is going on. The teacher does not notice the cheating as she is working at her desk. The next day the same teacher announces that she found a cheat sheet for the exam on the floor after class. She notifies the class that she intends to file this report with the school Honor Council for its investigation and not record any grades for the exam until those who participated come forward.

The Actors: You, the student you made eye contact with, students who cheated, others, the teacher

Stop! Are my emotions in control? Do I have a dilemma? (Describe the problem.)

Think!

What are my choices?	What character traits would be demonstrated?	How does the Golden Rule apply?
1.
2.
3.
4.

Act! What character traits do I choose to demonstrate? What choice will I make?

What supporting character traits or skills will I need to act on my choice? Do I need to ask for help?