

Strengthening Families: A workshop for Parenting Adults

FORMAT: ON-SITE HALF DAY OR VIRTUAL

Parents and families do a lot of things right when it comes to raising children. Unfortunately, parents rarely stop to think about what they are doing right and why that really matters for their kids. Based on new research on America's diverse families, this workshop introduces a strength-based framework that highlights five dimensions of parenting that really matter.

PARTICIPANTS WILL

- Review findings from studies at Search Institute and elsewhere that demonstrate the connections between strong family relationships and positive youth outcomes
- Examine the five elements of Search Institute's Developmental Relationships framework
- Reflect on their own family's strengths
- Discover how they are already building developmental relationships in their families
- Brainstorm how they can apply a developmental relationship approach to their parenting
- Discover resources and supports for building developmental relationships and enhancing their family's strengths

WHO SHOULD ATTEND

- Parenting adults
- Professionals and community members seeking to support parents
